This document will be written in simple English and not total legalese. However, if I have to, this document will be rewritten in complete legalese.

https://www.example.com/

A user logged in to a GNU/Linux server with the Apache2 web server installed may see something similar to this:

Simply put, the website starts where the root page file is located, which is in the page root.

DEFINITIONS:

- "My website" means the domain name https://bobs-cool-site.neocities.org/

- A "covered work" means any HTML document, image data, text data or audio data in the pages/ directory of my website and any of its subdirectories unless there is a separate conditions document associated with it. Here are a few examples of a covered work:
  - pages/rambles/computing.html
  - pages/rambles/shrines/minecraft.html
  - pages/banners/TaCBanner.png
  - pages/projects/mimgs/thebrick.jpg

  Here are a few examples of what is NOT a covered work:
  - pages/journal.html
  - index.html
  - not_found.html
  - main.html

- "AI", an abbreviation for "Artificial Intelligence", is a system that takes input data from files of any type and attempts to create new data using those files.

CONDITIONS:

- If you are citing from a covered work:
  - You must include the text verbatim.
  - You must include the sentence before it verbatim unless the sentence you are citing is the first one in the paragraph.
  - You must include the sentence after verbatim it unless it is the last sentence in the paragraph.
  - You must provide attribution to me and provide a hyperlink to the web site.
  - Because of the nature of the website, it is preferable, but not required to hyperlink to the index of the website and/or provide a warning about the contents of the website equivalent to what is on the index of the website

- If you are using any covered work for AI:
  - You may not use any covered work for AI without written permission from me.
